

NEW TRADE SCHOOL OPEN

Dedication of the Lucas A. Steinam School of Metal Working.

Mayor Low and Borough President Cantor Among the Speakers—Description of New Structure.

Mayor Low, Borough President Cantor, and Jacob H. Schiff spoke last night at the dedication exercises of the Lucas A. Steinam School of Metal Working, at 225 East Ninth Street, which has been erected for the Hebrew Technical Institute by Mr. and Mrs. Abraham Steinam in memory of their son, Lucas. A letter of regret from President Roosevelt was read.

Mr. Schiff was the presiding officer of the meeting, which was held in the auditorium of the new building. He reviewed the history of the Institute and the Steinam Memorial Building Fund of $100,000, which was conveyed to trustees created by legislative charter last year, and out of which the new structure was erected.

Abraham Steinam in a brief address presented the keys of the building to Joseph B. Bloomingdale, the President of the institute, who made a short acknowledgement.

Mr. Schiff, by way of introducing the Mayor, referred to municipal corruption as having too long retarded the growth of the city. "But," he declared, "thank God, different conditions now prevail."

The Mayor said that, as he who makes two blades of grass grow where one grew before is reckoned a public benefactor, so he who founds a school to make lads more self-supporting and more self-respecting is a benefactor to his community. He referred to the Spanish war victories as due largely to naval school training and instanced it as proof that schools may fit boys for almost anything.

He emphasized the need of artistic work in the metals, and quoted a portion of Longfellow's poem, "Nuremberg," closing with the apostrophe to the "nobility of labor, the long pedigree of toil."

Borough President Cantor won a laugh from the Mayor with his opening assertion that "this is the greatest borough in the world." He paid a tribute to the ingenuity of the American artisan, and the mission of technical education for boys.

Prof. Morris Loeb, Chairman of the Instruction Committee of the Institute, who was the last speaker, said in part:

"The tendency of the Jewish youth to break away from the old paths of work is shown in a great many ways; but what seems most pathetic to an educator is the evident belief that any form of learning is in itself a sufficient education, quite without regard to the uses to which it is to be applied. One of the dangers of this tendency toward the promiscuous acquisition of knowledge lies in the production of what the Germans call an educated proletariat. Our city is already teeming with young men who have educated themselves as teachers, physicians, and lawyers, and whose opportunity for gaining a livelihood is so slight that they are driven to the most desperate measures in order to exist at all."

The Rev. Dr. Gustav Gottheil pronounced the benediction.

Some of those who were present: Mr. and Mrs. Solomon Loeb, Mr. and Mrs. Morris Loeb, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Stern, Mr. and Mrs. Isidor Straus, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Rice, Myer S. Isaacs, Mr. and Mrs. Emanuel Seligman, Mrs. Esther Herrman, Emanuel Lehman, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel D. Levy, Mr. and Mrs. Lyman G. Bloomingdale, E. W. Bloomingdale, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Guggenheim, the Rev. Dr. Kaufman Kohler, Mrs. Mayer Lehman, Mr. and Mrs. Nathaniel Myers, Mr. and Mrs. Percival S. Menken, Mrs. Theodore Hellman, Mr. and Mrs. Max E. Bernheimer, Simon E. Bernheimer, and Mr. and Mrs. Ludwig Dreyfuss.

The new structure is six stories high, fireproof in construction, and its facade is of limestone and gray brick. In the basement is the heat, light, and power plant. On the first floor is the auditorium; on the second the metal-working shop, fully equipped with vises, lathes, milling, and planing machines; on the third, a pattern-making shop; on the fourth, a joinery shop; on the fifth, a mechanical drawing room, and on the top floor a forge shop and the molding and casting room.

LOOKING FOR A PHILANTHROPIST

Vain Search in the Tenderloin for Man Who Advertised for Women Needing Cash and Assistance.

That part of the Tenderloin, taking in the block on Twenty-ninth Street, between Broadway and Sixth Avenue, and which perhaps might be called the Tenderloin proper, received a midday shock yesterday which disturbed the quiet of the sleepers in the different buildings. The cause was an advertisement in one of the morning news papers which ran as follows:

To whom it may concern.—All women of the world who wishes to be redeemed from the life they are leading can receive aid financially and otherwise and be provided with homes in convents by applying to the Rev. AUGUSTUS KRAUSHAAR, 54 West 29th St.

The number indicated in the advertisement answered for four addresses. But at none of the four could this reverend philanthropic gentleman be located.

No. 54, first, is occupied by a tinner. He said he had hard work enough "making tin without giving it away to the neighbors."

No. 54, second, is a jewelry shop. The proprietor repairs watches, and, if necessary, bicycles and automobiles, and has been known to fix steam rollers. He merely said: "What you givin' us?"

No. 54, third, is a Chinese laundry, of which Kong Wop Saw, according to the sign painter, is the proprietor. Between his expectorations of starchy water on the garments before him he merely commented in answer to the question if his place was the headquarters of the Rev. Mr. Kraushaar, by saying, "No good man here. No ladee, all papey man."

No. 54, fourth, is a building, the entrance to which is guarded by a young man who sits in front of a grated door in the middle of which is small aperture framed by a magnifying glass. Look in, and your vision narrows down to the diameter of a quarter of an inch into total darkness. Look out, and your vision is extended, so that the face at the door is considerably magnified. One long ring of the electric bell, two short rings in succession, another long ring, and a colored man will open the slide after glancing through this unique lookout. As the door opens the sound of tickers and telegraph instruments can be heard, and the faint sound of a voice, when bang, and the door is shut.

The door attendant said, he had never heard of the reverend gentleman in question. "This is an office," he said, "and he is not one of our customers."

If the Rev. Mr. Kraushaar could have been found yesterday he would have been a busy man, but the "women of the world" would not have been his source of worry.

MRS. ELIZABETH DALE MARRIED

Woman Recently Accused of Murdering Her Child Weds Albert Waller, Her Companion.

Mrs. Elizabeth Howe Dale and Elbert Waller were married in Hoboken on Tuesday night by the Rev. John Rudolph, pastor of the German Evangelical Church. They announced that they would sail for Europe at once. It is believed that they boarded the Hamburg-American steamship Georgia yesterday, though their names were not on the passenger list.

Mrs. Dale and Waller arrived in Hoboken on Nov. 19 last, but Waller at once proceeded to Philadelphia. Mrs. Dale, who was then the wife of Alvin Dale of Chicago, went to Busch's Hotel with her five-year-old daughter Emeline. The child died suddenly the same night and the police arrested Mrs. Dale on the charge of murdering the child.

The Grand Jury decided that there was no foundation for the charge and exonerated the accused woman. Mr. Dale obtained a divorce from his wife in a Chicago court Tuesday, Waller being named as the co-respondent. Mrs. Dale at once sent to Chicago for a confirmation of the court's action, and she and Waller were married as soon as it arrived.

Brought Lilies for Easter.

The steamship Pretoria, which arrived from Bermuda yesterday, brought 6,000 lilies for the New York Easter trade. Many of the passengers also brought with them lilies for their own use.
